DESCRIBE THE F	RESENT AND ORI	GINAL (if kno	wn) PHYSICAL	APPEARANCE

Shepperd's Lot is a wood, weatherboarded two storey "double" house with a gabled roof, and an internal chimney at each end. Each section has three bays in its first storey, the center one being a door, and in the second storey, a window is above each first storey window, the space above the door being blank. The principal front faces west; extending east behind the northerly half is a rear wing of two storeys, covered with German siding.

While the two halves of this house are coincidental in size and shape, slight differences make it apparent that they were built at slightly different times. The southerly portion retains a suggestion of its north-end cornice return, while a "corner boars" at the juncture of the two sections appears to be related to the northerly portion. Southerly weatherboards are slightly narrower than those on the north portion.

All windows are 6/6, with 8 inch by 10 inch lights.
The approximate dimensions of the early sections are:
southerly portion: 19 feet deep by 20 feet long northerly portion: 19 feet deep by 18 feet long exterior walls: 10 inches thick

A stone walled cellar extends under the northerly portion only. Internally, the first storey is a single room with a fireplace at either end; the southerly mantel has pilasters of 19th century architrave moulding, with oval panels above in the frieze; the northerly mantel is of a very simple, late 19th century pilastered design. The east exterior door of the southerly portion has two tall panels full height with mouldings matching those of the nearby mantel. Several other doors in this storey, and above, are of flush panel construction with stiles and rails joined with mortise and tenon. East of each chimney is a stair to the sedond floor.

Second floor joists and the attic floor joists were raised several feet in the 20th century to provide more headroom; consequently, the entire interior is of the 20th century.

It is not possible to determine, positively, which section is the original as interior walls have been removed. Such a determination could be made, perhaps, if portions of the siding near the juncture were removed. Logically, due to the existence of the cellar, the northerly portion was the first built.

The thickness of the walls, and personal recollections of persons familiar with the house, indicate that this is a two storey log house. The general scheme of three bays with a door centered between windows in the first storey, and two windows only in the second, ig a typical early scheme, characteristic of log houses.

Information regarding this property and the 1798 Federal Direct

Tax was not available.
